

“Money is the lifeblood of construction – how to keep it flowing under a common law or civil law system”

The AGCLP (Anglo-German Construction Law Platform) in conjunction with King's College London are proud to present the seminar “Money is the lifeblood of construction – how to keep it flowing under a common law or civil law system”.

The AGCLP was created late 2013 by leading lawyers, judges, academics and professionals from Germany and the UK specializing in the field of transnational construction law. A gap has always existed in the flow of construction law knowledge between the Common (UK) and Civil (German) Law systems, which have in turn influenced other national legal systems, such as that of Turkey. Thus the AGCLP was created to provide a working platform for debating practical construction law issues between the 2 jurisdictions in order to foster an academic and professional exchange on transnational construction law.

Money is certainly the lifeblood of a construction project yet lawyers and construction professionals are not entirely sure how payment entitlements are established and secured in Common and Civil law jurisdictions. The seminar will be very helpful, and necessary, in raising awareness for any lawyer or construction professional in transnational construction law.
